Premier takes Mulcair to task on Twitter

Retaliation. Federal NDP Leader Thomas Mulcair's comments about the oilsands did not sit well with Brad Wall

NDP Leader Thomas Mulcair.

Premier Brad Wall is using Twitter to poke at federal NDP Leader Thomas Mulcair.

Wall takes issue with comments Mulcair made over the weekend while discussing the oilsands.

The NDP leader told a CBC radio program that the oilsands are artificially inflating the Canadian dollar and hollowing out the country's manufacturing sector.

He called it the definition of Dutch disease — a reference to the Netherlands and how a natural gas find in that country led to declines in manufacturing in the 1960s.

While the oilsands are largely an Alberta issue, Saskatchewan's economy is heavily dependant on resource revenue and Wall says he wants Mulcair to explain himself.

He says if Mulcair thinks the oilsands are a disease, Wall wants to know what the NDP thinks the cure is.

Mulcair told the radio program he wants to see the oilsands developed in a responsible way that sees more refining done in Canada and less raw product sent abroad.

Thriving city music scene like a family, insiders say

Pride of the Prairies. Bands such as the Sheepdogs and Slow Down, Molasses are winning global accolades

JANE CAULFIELD

Matt Voyno, left, and Arnie Van Lambalgen have been heavily involved in the Saskatoon music scene for many years. JANE CAULFIELD/METRO

Researchers from University College Dublin have recently mapped how global cities influence what is thought to be cool in musical trends. Leading the pack in indie-rock influence is Montreal, followed closely by Toronto.

But what about Saskatoon? With local bands such as the Sheepdogs gaining international attention, we must have some influence, right?

Two local music gurus say the Saskatoon scene is definitely growing.

"I think, generally, the scene is thriving like never before," says Matt Voyno, musician and author of the blog The New Rockstar Philosophy. "I don't know if it's Berlin! London! Saskatoon! It's not quite there yet. We're still relatively small."

CFCR music director Arnie Van Lambalgen suggests the family-like vibe within the local music scene is better for fostering stronger influence.

"The part of Toronto and Montreal is that a lot of bands get big on just the hype and media, but there's nothing to back it up with. This is sustainable growth," Van Lambalgen says. "Having that whole community and chain of support is better for your career."

Voyno adds, "The big thing with a lot of those bigger centres is that they have talent because of their size, but they also have the music industry behind them. They have record labels, they have managers, they have publicists, they have all that stuff going on there. Only in the last three years has there been a growth of the industry here."

The global reception of some local bands means the world has started to pay attention to Saskatoon.

"Obviously, any time one band from an area blows up and gets noticed, more get noticed," Van Lambalgen says. "But there's been talented bands here for decades."

He and Voyno say the indie-rock scene in Saskatchewan may not have a specific sound, but it has a unique spirit.

"I think it's the personality and the people and the work ethic. I definitely find there's more people from the Prairies that have more pride in their work, and where they came from and where they're going," Van Lambalgen says.

"All those bands talk to each other and they help each other," Voyno adds.

Up-and-comers

- Saskatoon's the Sheepdogs made international headlines in 2011 when they won Rolling Stone's Choose the Cover competition.
- Another local band, the Deep Dark Woods, was nominated for album of the year in the roots and traditional category at the 2012 Juno awards.

Members of the Saskatoon indie band Slow Down, Molasses pose near Stonehenge in southern England. The band members are, from left, Patrick Schmidt (guitar and banjo), Adrienne Tastad (violin), Jeanette Stewart (keyboards and vocals), Ryan Drabble (drums), Tyson McShane (guitar and vocals), Chris Morin (bass and guitar) and Anne-Marie Wheeler (trombone). # Local band taking on next-level U.K. tour

Saskatoon's fast-rising indie band Slow Down, Molasses is heading off on its second U.K. tour, and leader Tyson McShane says this trip could be an important one for the group.

McShane says the band played the End of the Road Festival in North Dorset in 2011, a showcase for new bands. But this time around, the group will be playing the Great Escape festival in Brighton and Sound City in Liverpool — which are much more mainstream venues.

"For us, it's the opportunity to be playing to industry people, labels, all of the media and all over Europe," McShane says. "It's a chance to be playing to the people who can help us get back there a lot more.

"Last time," he adds, "it was one festival and a pretty unique festival that really goes out of their way to try and find bands like us, while this is really a more mainstream kind of thing.... It's another level of tour."

McShane says even though he is excited about representing Saskatchewan and Saskatoon on an international stage, his band is not the only one from the province making an international splash.

"Jordan Cook and the Sheepdogs are playing, so we're playing with Saskatchewan people in Brighton — which is really funny — but it's also really amazing that in the last few years of touring, everyone asks about bands from Saskatoon," McShane says.

Indie darlings

- Slow Down, Molasses released its first album, I'm An Old Believer, in 2008 and its second album, Walk Into the Sea, in 2010.
- The collective, formed in 2006, has done four national tours across Canada.
- Locals Chad Munsob of the Moas and Ben Dobnie of Feral Children will be touring with the band in the U.K.

"People all of a sudden are starting to find out about the great music scene we have and we've had a great music scene for a long time, but now people are really starting to pick up on it."

City looks to keep cab drivers safe

Assault. Mandatory safety requirements coming for Saskatoon cabbies in light of recent violence

MORGAN MODJESKI
morgan.modjeski@metronews.ca

A recent assault on a cab driver in Saskatoon has raised questions about cab safety in the city. But administration says mandatory safety requirements are coming in the next few months.

Shelley Sutherland, the city treasurer and manager of the revenue branch, the department responsible for taxi regulations, said council approved a consultation of the industry to provide the city with recommendations in 2010, and now, some of those recommendations will soon become law.

"There were a number of recommendations that are being rolled up into a bylaw, but we've been working with companies to give them some time to meet some of the requirements," said Sutherland. "Having cameras installed is one of those requirements and it's not in bylaw at this moment — so city council has not seen it in bylaw — but it will be forthcoming in the next few months."

She explained the mandatory cab cameras will act like security cameras documenting trips to ensure both passengers and drivers are safe.

Coun. Pat Lorje said she feels there is a need for extra safety precautions for cab operators in the city.

"I feel very badly for cab drivers," Lorje said. "They perform an important service in this community and I would like to see them feel as safe as they can in their workplace."

Troy Larmer, general manager of the United Group, which oversees Blueline Taxi and United Cabs, says he would support mandatory safety requirements.

"We have cameras; we've recognized the importance of safety for our drivers and our passengers for a long time," said Larmer. "Anything that would make it safer for the drivers, we would definitely be in support of."

Troy Larmer METRO

Alyson Edwards, manager of public affairs for the Saskatoon Police Service, said the police would be behind the mandatory regulations when introduced.

"The police service would support any type of safety measures that can be implemented that would greater protect the safety of the drivers," said Edwards.

REEL Canada. Film fest designed to inspire

Nearly 250 students from five local high schools found inspiration in Canadian films at the REEL Canada Film Festival Monday.

"Students can learn about Canadian storytellers and media makers, and that they too can be storytellers and media makers," said Sue Biely, one of the organizers from REEL Canada.

REEL Canada is a national campaign from leaders in the television and film industry designed to bring Canadian films into the classroom. The day-long event features selected films and guest speakers for an interactive Q&A with students.

"This group of students have been very respectful. They've been asking some really great questions," said Biely.

Biely added that they have not been discussing the Saskatchewan film-employment tax-credit issue because the focus for the day should really remain on cultural and artistic education through Canadian film.

Saskatoon Public Schools' Media School teacher Joel Dietrich is the man responsible for getting REEL Canada to host the festival in Saskatoon.

"When they erupted, at the very end of the film, that was really cool to see," said Dietrich. "We're hoping to have it next year and really promote it and turn it into an annual event."

Peres. Israeli president lauds 'always positive, never indifferent' Canada

Shimon Peres thanked Stephen Harper for his staunch support of Israel, and Canada for its 60 years of friendship Monday as the Israeli president began a full state visit.

"I sense that Canada is always positive, never indifferent, never neutral," Peres said during his official welcome by the Governor General at Rideau Hall.

The Nobel laureate has been a fixture in Israeli politics since 1959, serving in 12 cabinets and twice as prime minister. He is currently the country's head of state — a largely ceremonial role — but remains an influential figure and a perceived leavening voice to hawkish Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu.

The president's five-day trip to Canada began as Netanyahu called an early national election amid talk of an "existential threat" to Israel from Iran's nuclear program.

Peres has expressed reservations about a pre-emptive strike against Iran, and his language upon arriving in Canada was that of the diplomat who won the Peace Prize in 1995 for his work with Yasser Arafat and Yitzhak Rabin on the Oslo Accords.

"Canada offers a new beginning, building bridges and closing gaps," Peres, who turns 89 in August, said at Rideau Hall.

"Israel, which is a start-up nation, breathes your air with real thirst."

Escorted up the Rideau Hall drive in brilliant spring sunshine by four mounted RCMP officers, Peres later planted an Eastern White Pine — known by the Iroquois as the Tree of Peace — on the grounds.

The Israeli president was greeted by the prime minister in the rotunda of Parliament's Hall of Honour.

Hearing. Corporal's mother alleges military tapes were doctored

A hearing into the suicide of a young soldier was thrown off course Monday by allegations that tapes of the military's interviews with his family were doctored.

Cpl. Stuart Langridge's mother told a Military Police Complaints Commission hearing that portions of her interviews with military investigators appear to be missing from audio recordings.

Sheila Fynes' allegations came as she was questioned over her dealings with the military and what she was told by them in the months after her son's death.

Lawyers suggested some of her interactions with them weren't reflected in transcripts of interviews, but she says the tapes appear to have been altered.

The hearing into Langridge's death was called because of complaints by the Fynes family that the military's investigations were biased and focused on exonerating the Forces. THE CANADIAN PRESS

McClintic a liar, argues defence

Michael Rafferty trial. Accused's mother claims outside court that her son is not guilty of killing Victoria Stafford

Terri-Lynne McClintic is like "Jekyll and Hyde," casting herself as an unwilling participant in her lover's scheme to abduct a child, when in fact the bloodthirsty young woman sought out Victoria Stafford and savagely murdered her, Michael Rafferty's lawyer suggested Monday.

The kidnapping was not orchestrated by Rafferty, there is no objective evidence that Rafferty raped Tori as alleged, and he is not the one who wielded the hammer, Dirk Derstine suggested. For McClintic to testify otherwise is "absurd," he said.

The defence presented closing arguments Monday, and Rafferty's lawyer told the jury they shouldn't let the "unspeakable tragedy" of what happened to Tori overwhelm their deliberations.

Rafferty was there when Tori died from blows to the head with a hammer, and he may have even come to realize at some point in the two and a half hours the little girl was being held against her will, Derstine told the jury.

The rest, he scoffed, is a fiction invented by a troubled woman who "perjured herself over and over and over again."

McClintic, who has a proven history of violence and torture ideation, was the true engine behind Tori's death, Derstine said.

Michael Rafferty's mother was at the London, Ont., courthouse. She said her son is not guilty of killing Victoria.

Mental Health Week

Monday kicked off Mental Health Week in Canada.

- One in five Canadians will experience a mental illness over the course of their lives.
- Each year the Canadian Mental Health Association helps 100,000 Canadians.

1st strategy for mental health

Planners at the Mental Health Commission of Canada are looking at the fight against cancer as an inspiration for their new campaign.

Their first ever national mental-health strategy issued on Monday envisions a complete rethinking of how society looks at mental health — much like the revolution around cancer three or four decades ago.

Nowadays, there is little stigma in discussing cancer of the most intimate body parts.

Finding funding for treatment is common cause for philanthropists and recreational joggers alike.

The cancer-research community is vibrant.

Advocates for better mental health can only dream of such national consensus and attention. But with a national strategy, there is a clear path to move those dreams closer to reality.

"The mental-health system should be there for everyone who needs it and now is the time to make this happen," the commission's lengthy report said.

Putin sworn in for third term, hundreds protest

Kremlin. At least 120 detained by riot police outside the Russian leader's inauguration ceremony

Vladimir Putin took the oath of office in a brief but regal Kremlin ceremony on Monday, while on the streets outside thousands of helmeted riot police prevented hundreds of demonstrators from protesting his return to the presidency.

Putin, 59, has ruled Russia since 2000, first as president and then during the past four years as prime minister. The new, now six-year term will keep him in power until 2018, with the option of running for a fourth term.

"I consider serving the fatherland and our people to be the meaning of my whole life and my duty," Putin said while addressing 3,000 guests in a Kremlin hall glittering with gold leaf.

Despite unprecedented security measures in the centre of Moscow, where streets were closed to traffic and passengers prevented from exiting subway stations, at least 1,000 opposition activists tried to protest along the route Putin's motorcade took to the Kremlin. Police picked out anyone wearing the white ribbons that are the symbol of the anti-Putin protest movement.

The demonstrators, separated into several groups, were met by helmeted riot police. At least 120 were detained, including opposition leader Boris Nemtsov, who was grabbed while sitting at an outdoor cafe. In the evening, dozens of protesters gathered outside the presidential administration, and police detained them one by one, escorting them onto buses.

South Korea. Powdered baby-flesh capsules seized

South Korea has seized thousands of smuggled drug capsules filled with powdered flesh from dead babies, which some people believe can cure disease, officials said Monday.

The capsules were made in northeastern China from babies whose bodies were chopped into small pieces and dried on stoves before being turned into powder, the Korea Customs Service said.

Customs officials refused to say where the dead babies came from or who made the capsules, citing possible diplomatic friction with Beijing. Chinese officials ordered an investigation into the production of drugs made from dead fetuses or newborns last year.

The customs office has discovered 35 smuggling attempts since August of about 17,450 capsules disguised as stamina boosters, and some people believe them to be a panacea for disease, the customs service said in a statement. The capsules of human flesh, however, contained bacteria and other harmful ingredients.

The smugglers told customs officials they believed the capsules were ordinary stamina boosters and did not know the ingredients or manufacturing process.

Ethnic Koreans from northeastern China who now live in South Korea were intending to use the capsules themselves or share them with other Korean-Chinese, a customs official said. They were carried in luggage or sent by international mail. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CIA intercepts another al-Qaida underwear bomb

The CIA thwarted an ambitious plot by al-Qaida's affiliate in Yemen to destroy a U.S.-bound airliner using a bomb with a sophisticated new design around the one-year anniversary of the killing of Osama bin Laden, The Associated Press has learned.

The plot involved an upgrade of the underwear bomb that failed to detonate aboard a jetliner over Detroit in on Dec. 25, 2009. This new bomb also was designed to be used in a passenger's underwear, but this time al-Qaida developed a more refined detonation system, U.S. officials said.

The FBI is examining the latest bomb to see whether it could have passed through airport security and brought down an airplane, officials said. It was not clear whether new body scanners used in many airports would have detected it.

There were no immediate plans to change security procedures at U.S. airports.

The Yemen-based would-be suicide bomber had not yet picked a target or bought a plane ticket when the CIA seized the bomb, U.S. officials said. It was not immediately clear what happened to the alleged bomber.

About the bomb

The CIA won't say much about the plan, except:

- It's not a new idea. This is the second attempt by al-Qaida to hide a bomb in underwear.
- The device contained no metal parts. This may have allowed it to get by most security systems.

Caitlin Hayden, spokeswoman for the White House, said President Barack Obama learned about the plot in April and was assured the device posed no threat to the public.

The operation unfolded even as the White House and Department of Homeland Security assured the American public that they knew of no al-Qaida plots against the U.S. around the anniversary of bin Laden's death. The operation was carried out over the past few weeks, officials said.

On May 1, the Department of Homeland Security said, "We have no indication of any specific, credible threats or plots against the U.S. tied to the one-year anniversary of bin Laden's death."

The AP learned about the thwarted plot last week but agreed to White House and CIA requests not to publish it immediately because the sensitive intelligence operation still was under way. Once officials said those concerns were allayed, the AP decided to disclose the plot Monday.

It was not clear who actually built the bomb, but because of its sophistication and its similarity to the Detroit bomb, officials suspected it was the work of Ibrahim Hassan al-Asiri or one of his protegees. Al-Asiri constructed the first underwear bomb and two other unsuccessful devices that al-Qaida built into printer cartridges and shipped to the U.S. in 2010.

The operation is an intelligence victory for the United States and a reminder of al-Qaida's ambitions, despite the death of bin Laden and other senior leaders. Because of instability in the Yemeni government, the group's branch there has gained territory and strength. It has set up terrorist camps and, in some areas, even operates as a de facto government. ## Sarkozy loss an omen for Obama?

French President Nicolas Sarkozy's defeat could be a bad omen for U.S. President Barack Obama.

Sarkozy on Sunday joined a growing list of leaders swept aside by Europe's economic crisis. Some 11 have now fallen, including Italy's Silvio Berlusconi and Spain's Jose Louis Rodriguez Zapatero.

Sure, many European countries are in worse shape economically than the U.S. But there are some similarities, including broad voter skepticism that government programs are doing much to spur growth or produce jobs.

Polls show most Americans still think the country remains in recession, even though it technically ended almost three years ago. They also show Republican Mitt Romney leading Obama on handling economic issues.

That's bad for Obama, with the economy still the No. 1 election issue.

Romney often links the president to Europe, suggesting Obama "wants to make us a European-style welfare state." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Four Air Canada execs earning more as CEO earns less

Earnings. Despite airline's plummeting share price, top brass received first-class treatment in 2011

The compensation package for Air Canada's CEO fell 12 per cent last year, while the payouts of the airline's four other top executives soared even though continued losses drove its share price down more than 70 per cent.

Calin Rovinescu earned $4 million in 2011, down from $4.55 million a year earlier, but higher than the $2.6 million during his first nine months on the job in 2009, according to a proxy circular.

Chief financial officer Michael Rousseau, chief operating officer Duncan Dee, chief commercial officer Benjamin Smith and senior vice-president of operations David Legge each saw their compensation increase by between 18 per cent to nearly 47 per cent.

Base salaries remained mostly steady but each executive saw large gains in share and options-based awards while non-equity incentives fell.

Rousseau's compensation grew to $1.68 million, Dee's was $1.62 million, Smith made $1.37 million and Legge's was up to $1.15 million.

Rovinescu's compensation doesn't include the $5-million retention bonus awarded in March, which will show up on next year's compensation.

However, 280,000 options granted to him over the past two years were cancelled at his request. The Montreal-based airline lost $249 million or 92 cents per share last year despite a 7.7 per cent increase in revenues to $11.6 billion.

Still, all the executives were rewarded for having increased revenues, mitigating fuel-expense increases, preserving liquidity, surpassing cost-cutting targets, achieving high load factors and achieving 90 per cent of the pre-tax operating earnings targets despite fuel and labour challenges.

- One of Rovinescu's key accomplishments was to manage through several actual and threatened labour disruptions, including a three-day strike by service and airport workers with minimal passenger disruption, said the proxy report.

UNEXPECTED LIFE LESSONS FROM MOM

SHE SAYS...
Jessica Napier
metronews.ca/shesays

With another Hallmark holiday coming up this weekend, I wanted to mark the occasion without boring you with yet another Mother's Day gift guide. And since mom really does know best most of the time (except when it comes to using Facebook), I thought I'd share some of the pieces of wisdom my mother has given me over the years.

Don't be so concerned with what "everyone else" is doing. There is no "right way" to live — there is only your way. Being normal is extremely overrated, so don't allow other people's expectations and timelines dictate how you live your life.

Proper nutrition is important. In the summer months, drink plenty of sangria in order to increase your daily fruit intake.

Location, location, location. This old real-estate adage can be applied to both house-hunting and life-living. Over the course of her 50-something years, my mother has always practised regular relocation: jobs, houses, countries, etc. She constantly encourages me to visit new places, see new things and get a new perspective.

Put your best foot forward. The bad footwear choices of your 20s will come back to haunt you later on in life. Sadly, the threat of flat feet and an orthotics dependency haven't actually stopped me from investing in a closet full of unsupportive shoes. Sorry, mom.

Keep your home in bloom. Never depend on someone else to buy you flowers. You'll never regret treating yourself to a beautiful bouquet every once in a while.

One man's trash is a college student's entire living-room set. Before moving into my first student house, my mom insisted on trolling our neighbourhood to look for curbside couches and side tables. I was mortified as I watched her load up our minivan with hand-me-down furniture scavenged from other people's driveways, but you know what? It was an extremely cheap way to furnish a home for a bunch of jobless 20-year-olds. Who needs dignity when you have a free desk chair?

Players only love you when they're playing. Fleetwood Mac's entire discography is an appropriate soundtrack for almost any occasion, especially breakups.

You can't take it with you. My parents informed me long ago that any sort of inheritance is out of the question. Since you can't enjoy your money when you're in the ground, you might as well spend all of it before you go. Is this sound financial advice? Absolutely not. But nobody is going to remember you by the final balance in your bank account.

Mom's the word

Over the course of her 50-something years, my mother has always practised regular relocation: jobs, houses, countries, etc. She constantly encourages me to visit new places, see new things and get a new perspective.

Sooty set takes to the streets

A man dressed as a chimney sweep takes part in the annual Sweeps Festival on Monday in Rochester, England. The three-day festival dates back 400 years and was originally the one day in the year when chimney sweeps could afford time off to celebrate the coming of spring. This marks the festival's 32nd year since its reintroduction in 1981, with traditional activities including Morris dancers, who parade to Rochester Castle.

- A businessman and historian, Gordon Newton, revived the festival in 1981.

News network aimed at Latinos in the works

ABC News and Univision are teaming up to start an English-language news network aimed at Latinos. The networks said Monday that a website and mobile content will be available this year. A television network is expected next year. Univision News President Isaac Lee says the network, as yet unnamed, will not only inform Latino Americans but let viewers of all nationalities know what issues are important to people within that growing demographic. Disney and ABC Television Group chairwoman Anne Sweeney say the venture is an important step in broadening ABC's reach.

Separating the man from the myth

Marley. New documentary about iconic singer aims to show what Bob Marley was like as a friend, father and lover

PAT HEALY
Metro World News in Boston

When award-winning director Kevin MacDonald (Last King of Scotland) turns his attention to a Bob Marley documentary, it's obviously going to go far beyond the "every little thing's gonna be all right" aspect of the late reggae legend.

"When I saw other things done on him in the past and read other books, I never felt like I knew him as a person," says the director.

"The aim is to see him as a man — what he was like as a lover, as a friend."

While he was alive, Bob Marley did very few on-camera interviews, so MacDonald had to unearth other sources, which included Marley's teacher, his half-sister and a childhood friend.

"The main challenge of the film was getting the people to talk," says MacDonald.

"About a third of them have never spoken (about Marley) before."

In the film, simply titled Marley, MacDonald also provides an honest look at Marley's family life — he had at least 13 children from eight different women — and daughter Cedella speaks frankly about how the communal living situation at the singer's house deprived her of important time with her father.

"She felt that sense that he was always surrounded by the brethren," says MacDonald.

"It was a religious order, almost a military setup. He was called 'Skipper,' and he ran a very tight ship. He was strict with [his musicians] — he made them rehearse a lot. [Many people have an] image of Rastas that they lazed around smoking ganja all day, but in fact he was this driven guy."

Marley director Kevin MacDonald on Bob Marley's work ethic and expectations of his band

MacDonald says his own international experience helped reinforce his notion that it was time somebody re-examined the life of Bob Marley on film.

"When I was making The Last King of Scotland, I made that in Uganda and I was amazed by how in the slums of Uganda, you'd come across huge lots of Rastas singing Bob's music, playing Bob's music, doing murals of his face, graffiti of his lyrics. I was just realizing how Bob still speaks to people. ... In Tibet, Indonesia — not just an audience of college stoners or Western people who chill out and love the vibe of it.

"It's also music that has a message that continues to appeal to people around the developing world. And that's the key about understanding Bob — he's the only Third World superstar.

"He didn't come from North America or Europe, he came from abject poverty, he grew up in a shack in the hills of Jamaica sleeping on an earth floor. ... So when you go to Indonesia, people have never heard of the Rolling Stones, but they've all heard of Bob Marley.

"In Nigeria, they've got streets and squares named after him."

Underworld: Awakening

Directors. Mans Marlind, Bjorn Stein

Stars. Kate Beckinsale, Michael Ealy

As Underworld: Awakening opens, vampire avenger Selene (Kate Beckinsale, still wearing that glorious skin-tight catsuit) has been in cryogenic deep freeze for 12 years, while knuckleheaded humans slowly figured out that there's been an undead riot goin' on below the greasy mean streets of Underworld land. In this, the fourth chapter of an increasingly dull horror fantasy franchise that pits vampires against werewolves against humans, Selene is awakened from her chilly slumber. She learns humans have not only discerned the presence of vampires and Lycans (werewolves) in their midst, they've come close to eradicating them. It's time to hang up Kate's catsuit and drive a wooden stake into Underworld.

The Vow

Director. Michael Sucsy

Stars. Rachel McAdams, Channing Tatum

Based on a true story, but more accurately inspired by the romantic fantasies that fuel many a Valentine's Day movie date, The Vow is an example of personal chemistry barely exceeding genre formula. Channing Tatum and Rachel McAdams are Leo and Paige, a couple who are all wrong for each other until they realize they're all right. Cupid wins, marriage ensues, but the cooing is silenced by the dump truck that sends Paige to hospital and her memory to limbo. She can't remember who Leo is and can't imagine he'd be her husband. There's no mistaking elements of The Notebook here, which McAdams also starred in, and director Michael Sucsy doesn't scrimp on the suds. But Tatum and McAdams make a fine pair.

Heckle Russell Brand at your own risk

MONICA WEYMOUTH

Russell Brand was likely expecting some heckling at his stand-up show Saturday night. It was, after all, Cinco de Mayo in Atlantic City, where tequila is always the breakfast beverage of choice.

But when one audience member wouldn't stop shouting "Katy Perry," the comedian left the stage to defend his ex-wife's honour — or, more accurately, summon the powers of his British accent to methodically, expertly shame a drunk Jersey guy.

"Let's see how your mental illness looks in the daylight," Brand said, requesting that the house lights be turned on. After asking the audience to out the heckler, Brand wasn't pleased with what he discovered:

"You look like something that's fallen off the side of a church. And what is it that you have rattling around in your mind? Some bizarre combination of alcohol and idiocy. Some cocktail of nothing."

Excuse us — "cocktail of nothing"? That, Russell, would be a Red Bull and Vodka, the patron drink of obnoxious Americans everywhere. Show a little respect.

Zinc may help zap a pesky cold

Researchers have determined that using zinc lozenges may shorten the duration of common colds in adults — but only by about two days.

An analysis of patient trials comparing oral zinc preparations to placebo found that adults appeared to benefit from sucking on zinc lozenges.

But lead author Dr. Michelle Science of Toronto's Hospital for Sick Children says the researchers did not find that children were helped by taking zinc.

Science says that may be because most children in the studies were getting the zinc in a syrup and at a lower dose.

She says the modest benefit for adults taking zinc may not outweigh its adverse effects — a bad taste in the mouth and the likelihood of nausea.

Researchers say zinc did not improve severity of symptoms and more study is needed to determine what dose and type of zinc are best for shortening colds.

Clowning therapy. Professional medical clown brings cheer to couples with fertility problems, and says it can improve their success rate

Clowning around

"The art of clowning, of improvisation and acting on the spot ... I believe it can make a huge difference in therapy and treatment, both of children and of adults."

Nimrod Eisenberg, medical clown

Nimrod Eisenberg never wanted to enter the family business — medicine.

He went to theatre school against his parents' wishes, eventually working as an actor, an acrobat and a circus clown — fields far removed from the careers of his parents — his father was a doctor and his mother a midwife.

But the fates had other plans for him. That pull of destiny, or perhaps of heredity, brought Eisenberg closer to his parents, albeit in his own unique way.

Eisenberg is now a professional "medical clown" — a red-nosed bringer of cheer to couples with fertility problems.

"I was the one who ran away from the family destiny, who did not want to go work in a hospital," he said. "Eventually, in a twist of fate, I'm immersed in hospitals, doctors and nurses."

Medical clowning is part of a broader Israeli project Eisenberg joined 10 years ago called Dream Doctors, which brings "clowning therapy" to hospitals.

It's based on the idea that the presence of clowns during medical treatment can help improve patients' success rate.

He and his partner-in-clown, Jerome Arous, arrived in big floppy shoes and bright red noses at the Royal Victoria Hospital's fertility wing in Montreal on Thursday, hoping to bring some levity to patients undergoing in-vitro fertilization treatments.

The head of the fertility centre is thus far withholding judgment. There has been an Israeli study showing some benefit to the practice, but Dr. Hananel Holzer says he has yet to see a large enough study that confirms any medical impact from clowns.

"Is it really true? I am not convinced. Not yet," Holzer said. "Of course we are all skeptical when we hear this.

"But the main objective is to make patients feel better, to see a smile on their face."

The mood in the waiting room did become noticeably lighter Thursday as Eisenberg cradled and rocked a teapot under his arm — which he called his "clown baby" — and joked with patients and nurses.

He even dropped to one knee to dramatically serenade one woman, who laughed in delight.

Later, with reporters, Eisenberg peeled off the rubber clown nose to speak earnestly about his passion for the unconventional profession. He swears it's no joke, and can actually make a real difference in people's lives — just like his own mom and dad have.

New guidelines aim to reduce the risk of cardiovascular disease starting right from childhood. ISTOCK

Healthy hearts. Guidelines for children

The American Academy of Pediatrics recently created new guidelines to reduce the risk of cardiovascular disease starting from childhood, including the following recommendations:

Ages 2 and up:
Your doctor should measure your child's height, weight and body mass index at every checkup. Have the doctor go over the results with you and, if necessary, explain what particular diet and activity changes could benefit your child.

Ages 3 and up:
Your child's blood pressure should be measured yearly. As with BMI, ask your doctor to discuss the results with you.

Ages 9 to 11:
A first cholesterol screening is recommended. Your child may need his or her cholesterol checked sooner if he or she has a parent whose total cholesterol is 240 or over or a close relative who has had a heart attack or stroke before the age of 55 (in males) or 65 (in females).

Dash of creativity creates a healthy dinner dish

Ingredients

4 portions
Preparation: 15 minutes
Cooking time: 20 minutes

- 125 ml (1/2 cup) fresh whole-wheat bread crumbs
- 50 ml (1/4 cup) shelled pistachios, finely chopped
- 2 cloves garlic, minced
- 1 ml (1/4 tsp) freshly ground black pepper
- 1 egg white
- 15 ml (1 tbsp) Dijon mustard
- 4 small white fish fillets (about 500 g/1 lb)
- 10 ml (2 tsp) canola oil

Chunky Roasted Red Pepper Sauce

- 5 ml (1 tsp) canola oil
- Half small onion, finely diced
- 30 ml (2 tbsp) chopped fresh flat-leaf parsley
- 1 jar (340 ml/12 oz) roasted red peppers, drained and diced
- 125 ml (1/2 cup) sodium reduced chicken broth
- 15 ml (1 tbsp) liquid honey

Fish. If you think healthy eating only consists of bland salads, think again. This recipe boasts a zingy pepper sauce

The soft meatiness of colourful pistachios contrasts with the crisp garlic crust of the fish. Choose catfish, tilapia, haddock or cod fillets.

1. In a shallow dish, combine bread crumbs, pistachios, garlic and pepper.

2. In another shallow dish, whisk together egg white and mustard. Coat fish fillets with mustard mixture and coat in bread crumb mixture.

3. In a large ovenproof nonstick skillet, heat 10 ml (2 tsp) oil; cook fish on medium-high heat for 2 minutes. Turn over and place in a 220 C (425 F) oven for about 8 minutes or until fish flakes when tested with a fork.

4. Meanwhile, in a small nonstick skillet or saucepan, heat 5 ml (1 tsp) oil over medium heat and cook onion and parsley for about 5 minutes or until softened.

5. Add peppers, broth and honey and bring to a simmer. Simmer for about 2 minutes or until some of the broth has evaporated. Serve over fish fillets. DEVELOPED BY EMILY RICHARDS FOR THE HEART AND STROKE FOUNDATION OF ONTARIO, HEARTANDSTROKE.CA/ THE CANADIAN PRESS

Anchovy oil pizza 101: Keep it simple

If anchovies gross you out, know this — compared to what people ate before there were anchovies, they're practically like cake and ice cream.

Until around the 16th century, there were no anchovies as we know them today: small silvery fish that are boned, salt-cured and packed in oil.

Instead, there was garum — the juice of salted and fermented fish guts. Garum lost favour about 500 years ago when people learned how to make anchovies.

Anchovies, however, are not a singular fish. Most cuisines around the world have their own "anchovy," most of which tend to be variants of one variety of fish, a relative of the herring.

But given the potential 'ick' factor, why eat them? Simple — they are flavour bombs that lend serious pizazz to whatever they are added to. And the good news is that the flavour they impart isn't even a bit fishy.

Here's why. After months of salt curing, the dominant flavours in anchovies are from enzymes and good bacteria, not the flesh itself (of which there is little). The result is an intense blend of fatty, salty, savory, meaty, even a bit cheesy.

Even better, when you cook anchovies they dissolve, leaving behind a massive savoury flavour but no evidence that any fish were harmed in the making.

Anchovies are widely used in the cuisines of Spain, Portugal, Italy and France. In Turkey they are so prized they have inspired volumes of poetry, even folk dances. That is some serious anchovy love.

This recipe keeps the pizza simple in order to let the anchovy oil really shine. But if you prefer a heavy-duty pizza, by all means pile on the toppings.

Don't want to make your own flatbread? Use the same anchovy oil and toppings on a ball of pizza dough.

This recipe serves four. MATTHEW MEAD/ THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ingredients

- 1 cup all-purpose flour
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 3 tablespoons olive oil, divided
- 1/4 cup warm water
- 2 oil-packed anchovy fillets
- 2 cloves garlic, crushed
- Pinch red pepper flakes
- 2 cups baby spinach
- 1 cup sliced white button mushrooms
- 2 cups shredded fontina or other semi-soft cheese

1. Heat oven to 500 F. Spray 2 baking sheets with olive oil cooking spray.

2. In food processor, combine flour and salt, then pulse to combine. With processor running, add 1 tbsp of olive oil, then slowly drizzle in the water until the dough forms a tacky, but not wet ball. If the dough is too dry, add water 1 teaspoon at a time and pulse until it holds together easily when squeezed.

3. Transfer dough to lightly floured counter. Divide dough into 4 equal pieces. Using a floured rolling pin, roll each piece to the size of a large dinner plate. Place 2 flatbreads on each baking sheet and set aside.

4. In a small bowl, combine the remaining 2 tablespoons of olive oil, the anchovies, garlic and red pepper flakes. Mash with a fork until chunky smooth.

5. Use a pastry brush to coat each flatbread with the anchovy-oil paste, then top each with a quarter each of the spinach and mushrooms.

6. Finish each pizza with 1/2 cup of cheese. Bake for 10 minutes, or until lightly browned at the edges and the cheese is melted.

Dear sisters, I have fallen for a great girl — the problem is she used to date my best friend, and although it's been years, I know she meant a lot to him. And it doesn't help that I was the guy he confided in while they were breaking up. She asked me out many times, and I avoided her out of respect for him, but I finally gave in and we really like each other. I asked him if he would mind if we went for drinks and he told me that if I did, it would be impossible for us to remain friends. Seriously?
BFF.

Jersey Shore BFFs Vinny, left, and Pauly D, definitely respect the 'guy code.' GETTY IMAGES

Claire: Dear BFF,

The saying 'All's fair in love and war' is ... total BS. It's all unfair — on both sides. He has good reason to be upset, and you have good reason to expect him to be less uptight after so many years.

I won't tell you it's a choice between your friend and the girl, because I think you might be able to have both ... eventually. But give your friend time, reach out to him regularly, and don't be shocked if you hear he made a voodoo doll in your image.

Strangely enough, your friendship has a better chance of surviving this if you and this girl become a long-term couple — that would show that you didn't take this risk for some fling. So good luck, on both fronts.

Andrea: Dear BFF,

You've probably heard of the "guy code" and thought that in this case, it no longer applied. But if this is your friend's reaction, it still does.

The choice you have to make is whether this girl is worth losing your friendship over or not. In my humble (and correct) opinion, it usually isn't. It doesn't mean you can never date her, but putting your relationship with your buddy first will allow him to see that your intentions are genuine, and that family ('brother from another mother' included) comes first.

He'll be more open to starting a conversation about boundaries versus jumping immediately to the defensive. Jumping into bed with her despite his wishes will only result in seriously complicated BBQs.

To gift or not to gift, that is the big question

Hi Charles,
I volunteered to help organize my friend's wedding. I'm pretty close with the bride and she expects me not to get them a gift. She is expecting to pay for my banquet meal and unexpected meals (i.e. paid meals for meetings). What should I do when they don't expect a gift from me? It seems a bit rude to not get them a gift.
Signed,
To Gift or Not?

Dear To Gift or Not,

Your friend seems very lucky to have you! It sounds like the bride is trying to make sure you don't feel taken advantage of, based on all of the hard work you are doing to help her have the wedding of her dreams (more brides need to pay attention to this fact!).

So firstly, since you are both her friend and attending the wedding, I think it is very appropriate for you to purchase something small for her to mark this important occasion.

Now the question is what to get, and how much to spend? If you were only attending the wedding as a guest, how much would you have spent? This could be a good starting point for you.

Have you thought of perhaps just an amazing picture of the two of you planning the wedding in a beautiful frame, a card with a prepaid dinner coupon for the bride and her new husband to enjoy or being part of a group present rather than getting something all by yourself? But also doing something that is meaningful and personal such as acting as the wedding planner can be just as important as a gift, so don't feel obligated.

Remember some golden rules:

1) Don't ever spend more than you can afford.

2) Don't be extravagant — it may only make the recipient uncomfortable.

3) Doing all of the planning and organizing is a big job and can be a gift in itself.

I hope this helps, and have fun planning!

Keep that credit intact while co-signing a loan for your children

The parent trap.
'Dad, can you just sign here?' Know the consequences before you become responsible for your children's debts

YOUR MONEY
Alison Griffiths
money@metronews.ca

Spring is a time of optimism as students graduate and venture out into the world of work.

It's also the season when young'uns may need cars, clothes, travel funds and furniture as they spread their adult wings.

And to acquire all that stuff, they often need a co-signer because they can't yet qualify for loans on their own.

Here are seven things to keep in mind if you are asked to guarantee a loan.

Alison's money rule

"Co-signing a loan is exactly the same as lending cash out of your pocket."

1. Lenders consider co-signers joint borrowers who are equally responsible for the amount owing.

2. The loan will likely will appear on your credit report and may adversely affect your credit score, especially if payments aren't made on time.

Debt collectors could pursue you if the loan is in arrears.

3. Since co-signers are legally responsible for the loan, monitor it closely.

Happily, if you co-sign with a federally regulated financial institution, you are entitled to receive the same information as the person who takes out the loan.

4. Before you become a co-signer consider the worst-case scenario. Can you afford the loss?

Even if there is an asset involved, like a car, it may be worth less than the amount owing.

5. Aside from the money what would it do to your relationship with the primary borrower if there were problems with the loan?

Co-signing is the same as lending money and should be treated as such.

6. If you are co-signing for a family member other than your child or for a child who has been away from home for some time, ask for a credit report.

This can create tension, but if they have trouble paying off debts, how is that going to be different with you as a co-signer?

7. When the loan has been repaid, get a statement from the lender that the debt has been discharged and check your credit report to ensure it is noted.

Most experts will advise against co-signing, but we as parents always want to help our kids.

Still, make sure you are aware of the consequences when you are responsible for someone else's debt.

Try to avoid hefty break fees

FUN AND FRUGAL
Leslie Scorgie
money@metronews.ca
@Lesliescorgie on Twitter

Are you financially ready to be a home owner? ISTOCK IMAGES

Since selling my house and discovering my mortgage prepayment penalty would be a whopping $5,000, I've been hunting for ways to reduce the break fee.

The best idea is to avoid the fees in the first place by knowing the ins-and-outs of the mortgage before you sign the papers.

When you sign a mortgage, you are committing to a multi-year legal contract to re-pay money (with interest) in exchange for receiving an immediate benefit — the money with which to buy a house.

From a legal standpoint, the person who is wanting out of a mortgage is breaking a contract and has to pay up. Know your pre-payment penalty and ensure you have the flexibility to make lump sum or double up payments on the mortgage.

If you're like me and have already sold your property, prepay the mortgage up to the allowable limit. Typically a borrower can pay a lump sum on the mortgage each year between 10 and 20 per cent of the original value of the mortgage.

You can do this through online banking or ask your lawyer to have the bank apply the allowable lump sum to the principle balance when the old mortgage is being paid out.

The penalty is then applied only to the remaining balance of the mortgage, which could reduce the fee by thousands of dollars.

Using RBC's mortgage prepayment calculator, I know that by paying an extra 10 per cent in principle on my mortgage balance, I can save $600 in break fees.

Coming up with the funds to pre-pay a mortgage can be a challenge. Some turn to their home-equity line of credit, which doesn't have a prepayment fee. Others take out a traditional loan or borrow from a friend. If you're going to pre-pay, ensure the benefits of the pre-payment (i.e. the savings on the penalty) are greater than the costs of borrowing funds.

Alternatively, negotiate with your existing lender to reduce or eliminate the fee in exchange for keeping your mortgage business with them.

Overall, if the fee is too great, don't break your mortgage!

Marc Staal scored a power-play goal 1:35 into overtime after Brad Richards tied it in the dying seconds of regulation to lift the New York Rangers to a stunning 3-2 victory over the Washington Capitals in Game 5 of the Eastern Conference semifinals Monday night.

With Henrik Lundqvist pulled for an extra attacker, Washington's Joel Ward took a four-minute penalty for high-sticking Carl Hagelin with 21.3 seconds left in the third period. Richards tied it on the first half of the power play with just 7.6 seconds to go, and Staal won it with a drive that appeared to deflect off a Washington player before beating Braden Holtby.

The Rangers can advance to the Eastern Conference finals on Wednesday in Washington.

With the crowd still buzzing over the shocking tying goal, a din that held up through the long intermission, John Mitchell won a faceoff in the Capitals' end to start the winning play. Staal corralled the puck at the right point, glided to the centre of the zone, and fired the drive that set off a wild celebration at Madison Square Garden.

The Rangers mobbed each other at centre ice as the crushed Capitals trudged toward the tunnel to their dressing room. Then the New York players raised their sticks to the crowd as red, white and blue streamers cascaded down from the rooftop.

The celebration, which culminated in fireworks as the three stars were announced to the crowd, seemed almost inevitable after Richards tied it.

With a 6-on-4 edge, Michael Del Zotto took a shot that hit traffic in front to the right of Holtby. Ryan Callahan took two or three hard whacks at the puck, but couldn't get it forward. Richards jammed his stick into the maze of legs and poked the puck past Holtby before he was able to cover it with his glove. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Canada bounces back against France

Patrick Sharp knew exactly what he was getting when Ryan Nugent-Hopkins was placed on a line with him and Jamie Benn at the IIHF World Hockey Championship.

"He had a lot of success against the Blackhawks this year, I'm familiar with the type of player he is," Sharp said of Nugent-Hopkins. "He's a great skater, he handles the puck well and he can finish when he gets an opportunity as well."

It showed on Monday as the newly formed unit piled up the points during a 7-2 victory by Canada over France.

Nugent-Hopkins opened the scoring less than two minutes into the game and went on to add another goal and an assist while Sharp finished with a goal and four assists and Benn had two goals and an assist.

"It was a fun game," said Nugent-Hopkins.

Canada got exactly what it wanted from a game against one of the weaker teams at the event. Coach Brent Sutter thought Canada's overall defensive play was much better than Saturday's 5-4 overtime loss to the United States and his line juggling yielded some immediate results.

All and all, it was a step forward.

"There's still room for improvement," said Sutter.

Getzlaf in the news

Canadian captain Ryan Getzlaf was flabbergasted at being linked to an incident at a Helsinki bar by Finnish media outlets.

- The reports said Regina's Getzlaf, Corey Perry and a couple other teammates were in an argument at a nightclub Saturday night.
- But Getzlaf said the reports were filled with inaccuracies.
- "Somebody tried to start an argument at the door. I said 'No! No! No!'" Getzlaf said. "It wasn't much more than that."

Horoscope

Aries | March 21 - April 20. Aim to make money and move up in the world.

Taurus | April 21 - May 21. At some stage today you will come to the conclusion that some of the things you fear are nothing more than illusions conjured up by your overactive imagination.

Gemini | May 22 - June 20. You've found it difficult to trust certain people in recent weeks, which has had a negative effect on relationships. Starting today your confidence in them will be restored.

Cancer | June 21 - July 22. You know what you want but try not to be too pushy or impatient because that could cause resentment among those who don't share your hunger to succeed.

Leo | July 23 - Aug. 22. Any plans you've had to put on hold in recent weeks can start moving forwards again now.

Virgo | Aug. 23 - Sept. 22. Use your powers of persuasion wisely and you will get whatever it is you desire.

Libra | Sept. 23 - Oct. 22. Make a point of talking to people today, even people you would usually go out of your way to avoid.

Scorpio | Oct. 23 - Nov. 21. If someone tries to tell you to work harder today you must tell them to mind their own business.

Sagittarius | Nov. 22 - Dec. 21. You need to shake things up a bit.

Capricorn | Dec. 22 - Jan 20. If for any reason you are less than happy with what's taking place at home or at work you must speak up.

Aquarius | Jan. 21 - Feb 18. You will have a great idea today, but you would be wise to keep it to yourself.

Pisces | Feb. 19 - March 20. News you receive from afar will help you make sense of something that has been confusing you.

SINGLE PARENT WITH KIDS

Maureen, 42, is a single mom living in Halifax with her two children, Sandra, 8, and Billy, 12. She rents a three-bedroom apartment close to the Public Gardens and not far from the medical centre where she works as office manager. Her kids can walk to school, and although she has a car — she uses it for her weekly grocery shopping and for driving the kids to practices — Maureen takes public transportation to work. She's always watched her money and looks for good value from every dollar she spends.

Maureen has an annual household income of $45,000. Some months she lives pay cheque to pay cheque but "I have a budget, and I stick to it. Along with all the monthly expenses, I'm saving for the kids' education, and every summer we travel west to visit family in Winnipeg."

She uses her Scotia Momentum® VISA Card to pay for a lot of the everyday purchases she makes such as gas, groceries and drugstore purchases.

The Scotia Momentum® VISA Card gives her 2 per cent cash back on everyday purchases at gas stations, grocery stores and drug stores, as well as on recurring bill payments. It also gives 1 per cent cash back on all other eligible purchases. The cash back payout is automatically deposited into her savings account every November. While there's an annual fee of $39, Maureen has worked out the cash back she gets on purchases — and it's worth it.

"It makes sense for me to use the card because I get cash back on gas, groceries and other things that I have to buy anyway," says Maureen. At the same time, she likes to have the credit card as a safety net and tries to pay the balance every month.

Scotia Momentum® Cash Back Calculator

Maureen's profile:

Maureen uses her Scotia Momentum® VISA card to pay for about $885 worth of purchases a month. Some fixed costs, such as rent, are not payable by credit card and therefore not included in these calculations.
